Objectives:

- ◆ Through the study of literature and writing, English majors develop an understanding of how the written word shapes and is shaped by the world in which we live.
- ◆ Students of literature are introduced to the historical foundations of the English language and learn to examine and interpret texts. Courses are available in the major periods and authors of both English and American literature, and other topics such as literary criticism, popular culture, regional literature and film.
- ◆ Students of writing are led to recognize and to develop the relationship between verbal communication and thought itself. Expository writing courses offer students instruction in nonfictive prose writing at every level, from beginning to professional. The creative writing courses enable students to become better readers, to view literature from the “inside,” and to use more vigorous and exact language.
- ◆ The skills, values, and ways of thinking emphasized in the English major provide excellent preparation for virtually any career field which requires critical analysis and exact writing. Publishing, technical writing, advertising, public relations, public administration and teaching are among careers that interest English majors.
- ◆ The English Department also offers a Professional Writing emphasis for English majors or a minor in Professional Writing for non-English majors. (Students who are enrolled in the Colleges of Business, Engineering, or Letters, Arts and Sciences may minor in Professional Writing.)
- ◆ At least nine credit hours toward the English major must be completed in the UCCS English department, three of which must be a 400 level seminar in literature.
- ◆ Get more involved on campus! Join riverrun, Think Out Loud, Sigma Tau Delta or The Screenwriter’s Group to meet other students also interested in this field. Contact the ROAR office at roar@uccs.edu or 262-3470 for information.
